I mean, it's not a tax haven for planning, but the government simply never introduced personal income tax. This has changed in recent years, but the good news is that as a resident without local income, you are not responsible for Paraguayan taxes and no one will bother you. Paraguay simply does not have a culture of paying taxes. After years of postponement, personal income tax was finally introduced in 2012, with a 10% tax charge. This tax seems more of a symbolic measure than anything else, it is aimed at Paraguayan upper classes, who in any case are likely to structure their affairs to avoid paying. The tax does not apply to worldwide income-only income generated in Paraguay. So, for example, if you own a property in Paraguay and get a rental income, or if you get paid by a local company, you are obliged to pay income tax. But if you live in Paraguay out of income earned outside the country, you will be exempt from income tax and have no obligation to submit. Many retirees or internet-based workers are taking advantage of this as well as the low cost of living to enjoy life in Paraguay. Europeans, Canadians, even anyone who's not American, since tax-resident Paraguay is therefore an excellent proposal. The United States, unfortunately, requires citizens to pay taxes on worldwide income even if they don't live there. The only way Americans in Paraguay escape the tax net is to obtain a second citizenship and renounce U.S. citizenship. In Paraguay, other taxes are relatively low. Vat is also 10%, property tax is between 0.5% and 1% of cadastre value per year, capital gains tax is 10% (20%, 50% gross) for non-residents and no wealth or inheritance tax. In Paraguay, all bond yields pay no income tax at all, although dividends are taxed at 5%. We want you to be prepared to handle taxes before they fight you. And to do that, we dig into what's new in tax season and what stays the same. Let's break down the details and find out how these changes are impacting this tax season!
